Earthquake science is a tough science - coz there's always the next earthquake to prove you right or wrong
Other scientists extol the efficacy of this or that drug - what the heck would i know if they're right or wrong - but i know if there's a big earthquake & someone had said there wouldn't be. Earthquake science is not an exact science - no science is - especially ones that claim to be - so it's kinda nice where there's that default sword of Demecles hanging over you. It breeds honesty. People are still free to explore new theories , but unlike so called THE Science - you're gonna get found out one way or another.

Why are scientists aligning with CCP? Apart from the influence of UFWD in academia, they've always thought we could whip this planet into shape if only we didn't have one hand tied behind our backs by vagaries of public opinion. If you really want to get things done - then the best way is central leadership - total control.

Hunter Biden is a Father-fucker.

Scientists are not able to think things through - there's a blocker in their brain that prevents it. We only focus on The Science & how to enforce it at scale. It's not our job to think of the social/ethical/economic consequences - that's the job of philosophers - such a pity we banned them out of existence.

All Orgs tend towards corruption - Absolute Globo-Orgs tend to it absolutely

Cartoon: scales of injustice - the elite few on one plate & the weight of the masses on the other

Reverse intervention skit - same as a normal intervention but crew coming in to give some uptight control-freak boss a shot of heroin

The buck never stops - that's the whole idea of ORGS - no-one is ultimately responsible

The Julius Caesar syndrome: we create democracy with our superior consciousness, but as ORGS, it tends towards centralization, self-interest/corruption. That is, it inevitably winds up being run by a cartel of wealthy elites. At some point it takes a charismatic personality to break the wheel - it's a dangerous game coz, potentially, that person then becomes a dictator - which in turn leads to corruption. Historically, we oscillate between these two extremes. Only solution is try to dawdle in the middle & hold back the night of corruption at either end.

Dan Andrews conducted his own Milgram Experiment on Victorians to punish non-compliers. It worked.

Everything is spin - that's why there's no real real

Conduct a Draconia tour of Victoria - visit the sites of the most draconian acts of Dictator Dan - Zoe Bueller's house - Spencer Street Station where the peaceful protester got coward-tackled from behind had his head smashed into the concrete - the tower block lockdowns - Dan Andrews's holiday house

The best indicator of past behaviour is: current behaviour
Assessing the cover-up of Covid, we can safely assume this is not their first rodeo - it's simply enacting a well-worn protocol

As Brian once said, Everything is political. I said, What about that pot-plant pot - how is that political?
He said, Ok, that pot was mass-produced by a corporation for a start.

Anyone who says they’re not political … they are the most political.

Hippocampus - part of the brain that actively limits our understanding of an issue. There is too much information to take in, so we need to a system to partly suppress some of it. Or in situations where the facts get in the road of a good story or our own tended self-image. This is why bad actors sleep great at night in their big, beautiful houses. Their brains won't let them feel guilty. Put em in jail, they won't sleep so well, but without accountability, the hippocampus prevents them from being plagued by negative self-thoughts.

Every human is a parallel universe existence of every other human

I only have one standard drink a day - luckily i have high standards!

Tea: the force of cultural acceptance of whatever is dished up. Why would you drink the factory floor sweepings of black tea exclusively (Aussie offerings) when you could drink real tea (Taiwan … rest of Asia)?
