

Iconic

But i don't want to knock media commentators - especially Bruce McEvaney - i love Bruce - he's so passionate ... about ... sports entertainment ... heee's ... :

Iconic

When i left Australia in 96, an icon was a statuette of The Blessed Virgin Mary - or Jesus - Dying-on-the-Cross ... for our sins ... !

When i arrived back, it'd come to mean: vaguely representative of ... something ... anything ... so long as it's commercial

Coming up next: the real life story of an Iconic Aussie breakfast-show-host who can't stop saying: Iconic

With other overused words - it's fine - i don't care - some i like when they first emerge - they capture the zeitgeist of our Orwellian :

dystopia

But iconic - yeah, i do actually have a mental/physical ... :

health condition

When i hear it, it's :

triggering

This condition involves: shortness of breath, a tightening in the chest ... & ... projectile..... :
vomit

So here's a reality check - for our peeps in the front row: the following may contain :
graphic content

Last Saturday, late-morning, i went to Bunnings to buy a door-handle

I got a good park, as normal

As soon as i stepped out of the car, i could smell the iconic :

Bunnings sausage & onion sanga

I followed that smell, Homer Simpson-style, then ate one in the iconic carpark. It's so spacious ...

I gazed up at the teal-green & orange-red color scheme of this huge Tin Shed. It stirred something deep inside me (rub stomach) ... this modern Aussie Church ... with its iconic image of :

The Hammer

Instead of ... The Cross

It looks rather sinister ... now i think about it ...

If you're gonna replace Jesus-nailed-to-the-cross as an Icon ... & your symbol is: The Hammer ...
it's a bit :

tone-deaf

Step-right-in - you can buy The Nails inside - or hey, why not upgrade ..? To a nail-gun ... !

Feeling somewhat uneasy, i entered the store. That was the : sliding doors moment

(figuratively - Bunnings doesn't have sliding doors - it has shutters)

I do remember thinking, as i gripped the iconic XL trolley & yanked it out: Turn back ... it's not too late

My gut instinct was telling me: You've had a gut-full of of sausage fat, & iconic thoughts. Step-the-fuck-away from Icon Town

Serendipitously, a friendly, bearded, Bunnings salesperson appeared - totally iconically

He kindly accompanied me to aisle number 13 ... the door handle aisle

This is a good but not too expensive brand we stock, he said, holding up a Bunnings/made-in-China door-handle

It's called ... Ikonic

That was the tipping-point, right there

A perfect :

storm

of sausage & onion ... gone :

mad

He was shocked ... i was mortified. He was a really noice iconic guy ... who reacted ... not toooo bad ... considering

Thank the Lord Jesus ... in a blue shawl - he was wearing his iconic Bunnings :
apron

... which turned out to be his saviour

Disclaimer: the above may or may not have happened as described - it could just be my self-serving ...:

Revision #3

Created 22 July 2024 09:16:37 by dulanndrift

Updated 22 July 2024 09:18:51 by dulanndrift